

We are very honoured that so many self-published authors want to stock or sell their title with Ginger and Pickles. We also understand the work, dedication and cost involved in self-publishing.

We aim to try to support local and Scottish writers; however, we are a very tiny bookshop and therefore have limited space. Due to the sheer volume of requests from self-published authors, we have had to change our approach.

We are no longer accepting submissions by post or by unsolicited requests in shop during our operating hours.

Whilst we still welcome submissions by email, we only require the following:

A very brief email explaining why you think your title would make a good fit with our shop and an attachment with a copy of your cover, a brief synopsis and a sample page of text.

We are not able to reply to everyone, but if we are interested, we will contact you. Please do not resubmit or come in to question staff members.

Please also note, we are unable to stock books that are self-published via the Amazon printing platform.

We wish you all the best with your publication.
